A VARIED HISTORY TO EXPLORE

Warley is steeped in history, which ensures there is always something interesting around the corner to explore. Dating back centuries, the area's name means 'a clearing in the woods,' which reflects Warley's ancient role as a watchful settlement on the edge of Essex Forest. In 1588, Warley also became a place of strategic importance. It was used as a meeting place for 900 horsemen from the eastern and midland counties, who then moved to Tilbury to help repel the Spanish Armada.

Neighbouring town of Brentwood.

RURAL CHARMS

Historically, Warley was part of the extensive parish of Great Warley, which encompassed much of the surrounding countryside. The area is first mentioned in records from the Domesday Book of 1086, where it was listed as a small agricultural community. Over the centuries, Warley developed primarily as a rural village, with agriculture remaining the dominant industry until the 19th century. The area still retains its rural ambience and charms, with surrounding countryside and nearby forests providing endless outdoor adventures. Nearby Warley Place Nature Reserve offers a glimpse into the past of the area too, with its stunning Victorian gardens offering ample opportunities for leisurely walks – it is a beautiful locale for nature enthusiasts and history buffs alike.

AN AREA OF GROWTH

The 18th and 19th centuries marked significant change for Warley, as it became strategically important due to its proximity to London. During this period, Warley became home to the Warley Barracks, established in 1804 as a permanent military station. The barracks served as the depot for the Essex Regiment and played a crucial role in both the Napoleonic Wars and the First and Second World Wars. The presence of the barracks brought about the construction of new housing, roads, and other infrastructure, leading to Warley's gradual urbanisation.

AN AREA FOR LUXURY

In 1959, after the closure of the barracks, 21 acres were sold to Ford Motor Company who opened their European Headquarters, which was specifically designed by TP Bennett in the modernist architectural style to replicate the aesthetic of the Ford head office in Detroit. The opening of this iconic building and the neighbouring housing dramatically changed the landscape of Warley. In 2019, Ford Headquarters sold the building and land for redevelopment into luxury apartments and housing – with the best yet to come! Continuing this rich legacy and prestigious architectural presence, we have returned to TP Bennett to design the Aquilla Row Scheme, which has resulted in a flawless design transition.

Incredible Townhouses

MODERN LIFESTYLES

Today, Warley will be home to the new Aquilla Row development, continuing the area's luxury appeal. The development consists of 13 townhouses, which include 4 end-terrace properties, 7 terraced homes, and 2 semi-detached residences. Maintaining the ethos of the development – to provide homeowners with the best – all the properties share the same internal layout, providing space, beauty, and high levels of luxury.
